After eight years of travelling through conflict and poverty zones, Marijn Poels - a left wing filmmaker/journalist - decides to take some time off. In the Austrian mountains no less. It confronts him unexpectedly with the roots of agriculture and its modern day perspective. Globalisation and climate politics are causing radical changes such as farmers becoming energy suppliers.

But the green ideology raises questions. The scientific topic of climate change has now become incontrovertibly a matter of world politics. Poels faces a personal conflict. Are we doing the right thing?

"Confusing and confrontational. Journalism at his highest level "

- Jury: Berlin Film Festival 2017 - BEST DOCUMENTARY

"Critical and daring documentary which encourages you to think different about globalization and climate change"

- Hello Geeky World

"I've seen all the climate change documentaries but what Marijn has created beats them all"

- Jan Jacobs, politics and science journalist
